Although this was a very personal experience for the officer, they managed the situation well by distancing themselves from the investigation due to a clear conflict of interest. They took the necessary steps to ensure that the integrity of the process was maintained.

There is no indication that the officer deviated from established protocols or acted in a way that would compromise the organization's integrity or its relationship with the public. Their decision to remove themselves from the investigation demonstrated a responsible approach in handling the situation.

After reviewing the complainant's concerns, the related incidents, and an extensive review of reports and records, along with the absence of additional input from the complainant, there is no evidence to support the allegations made. Based on the available information and the thorough review of all relevant materials, the allegations are deemed unsubstantiated.
